

The employee journey in the digital age

Start engagement ASAP
This is a great time to offer optional engagement opportunities and share details about company norms and expectations, especially for remote employees. Providing employees with an interactive app is the ideal way to accomplish this.

Start off on the right foot
Create a seamless onboarding process that integrates tasks from across the enterprise and helps employees understand their progress in the process.

Bridge the institutional knowledge gap
An IDA can help bridge the gap remote workers face by providing instantaneous and personalized answers to common questions, guiding employees through their journey by bringing important tasks and information into a single experience.

Onboarding & Beyond

Creating a successful Remote Onboarding Process that supports the entire employee journey

Onboarding alone is a challenge. It's a complex collection of disparate tasks and processes that can feel fragmented and frustrating to a new employee who's trying to learn the ropes of their new organization. Add in making that process remote and it gets even more difficult. Because they have no opportunities to simply turn to a coworker to ask a question, new remote workers can feel isolated and adrift, and that's not a great start to a relationship.

Thankfully, there are lots of ways to eliminate the challenges of remote onboarding and create an employee journey that supports long-term success. It's all about understanding what employees need and taking advantage of all the moments that matter as employees navigate their career.
